XRANGE ARCHITECTURE

Information

xrange is a multi-disciplinary studio, founded in 2003 by Grace Cheung, 37, and Royce YC Hong, 36. Cheung, a Columbia graduate, worked with Patkau Architects, Bernard Tschumi and OMA's Asian office. Hong's background was in industrial design and online marketing. Together, they created xrange to cover architecture, masterplanning, environments, products and concepts.

Inspiration

Describing themselves as having a 'a uniquely Asian point of view', the studio's architectural approach has to work with the 'impossible programmatic demands of our clients... unforgiving urbanism and a less-than-sophisticated construction industry'. Nonetheless, the studio continues to be inspired by the 'banal and the everyday-technology and contemporary and street art are also mind-openers for us,' they say.

Innovation

Their wide-ranging skills means a broad portfolio, including a resort hotel, mixed-use urban block, a 'tower house' for two musicians and hi-tech product designs like a Skype-enabled handset. Totally au fait with the very latest in CAD and CAM, xrange is uniquely placed to synthesise architecture and design. Tomorrow's architecture, they claim, 'will be made like a giant industrial product - an emission-free super concrete that is structure, skin and interior'. The studio's Ant Farm House wraps a traditional stone building with a thin layer of new function.
